

THE DALTON STAR

The Next Report

By Jake Weiss

Here it is—the report you have all been waiting for. Presenting: Old McDonald and Yankee Doodle’s farm selling story; report number two! Old McDonald dreads his new farm! He is no longer friends with Yankee Doodle and never will be.

Yankee Doodle is on a wild goose chase for Old McDonald. He is with his two hunting friends and looking all over for Old McDonald. Since Old McDonald is much smarter than them, when they get close to him he thinks of a brilliant way to escape them. Yankee Doodle no longer has two friends with him. He has just one. Here is how this happened.

One day when they were both in deep Nebraska, Yankee Doodle caught up to Old McDonald. Old McDonald luckily had just finished planning one of his brilliant ideas. He found a farmhouse. He took a broom and threw it at Yankee Doodle. Perfect shot! It hit Yankee and knocked him down. It was a perfect diversion. Yankee’s friends were distracted trying to revive Yankee and Yankee was passed out! Old McDonald took advantage and hid behind the farmhouse. Yankee’s group was barely fifty yards away! Old McDonald dug a hole right next to the farmhouse, making sure that Yankee’s friends couldn’t see him digging. Eventually he had dug a very deep hole. He ran for his life.

One minute later Yankee Doodle woke up from his faint. He was all ready to go in five seconds. They started running. The bigger, stockier one of Yankee’s helpers fell right down into the hole. Yankee’s quote right at that moment was,

“Alright, no more mister nice guy!”

This concludes our article. Be sure to look out for another report next week! And who knew that two friends could break up like that in one week! Thanks for reading!

A Publisher’s Job

By Jake Weiss

A publisher has a very important role in a newspaper. If there were no publisher there would be no newspaper! Exactly what a publisher does (at least in this case) is that they take other people’s ideas and type them up. In this case the publisher types up some of his own ideas, too. Then the publisher prints out many copies. He gives it to certain people to give it out. Now let’s hear the story completely designed for the Dalton Star!

Jake Weiss, your notorious (I mean cool; I don’t know what brought me to write notorious) publisher has a very important role in the newspaper. (Applause?) If he does not publish the newspaper once a week, there will be none! (How terrible!) As said before, I also type some of my own ideas. I give it to Elias Oakes and Devin Plumb to deliver. (They’re lucky I haven’t fired them yet.) Well, what else am I supposed to say? Goodbye!

The New Name

By Jake Weiss

The final article in today’s paper is an interesting one about the new name and logo symbol of the former Dalton News. Isn’t Dalton News such a boring name for a newspaper? How about get creative and make a new title?

Max Solotar, my editor in chief and I got together to brainstorm a new and improved title for this grade-wide newspaper. This is how we brainstormed. First we thought of the names of already existing newspapers. New York Times, Wall Street Journal, New York Sun... Hmmm, that one caught in our mind. We knew it would be boring to do The Dalton Sun because The New York Sun already exists. So we thought of a variant. How about The Dalton Star? Approved! There’s our name!

Now for the logo symbol. Well, the name is The Dalton Star. Why not base it on a star? Eventually we came up with a red star with a face on it. It has a red cape behind it, multi-colored dots on it, and a blue upside-down triangle with a D in it on top. If you can’t see the symbol in your head, you’ll see it somewhere in the hall next week or the week after.

I think this will conclude our paper for the day. I hope everyone has a great Thanksgiving and only a month after that is winter break! Have a good day!

DALTON RULES!
